

Recycling boost is good news for charities

MORE than five tons of recycled books, DVDs and music CDs have been donated to the British Heart Foundation by a Hemel Hempstead recycling company.

Waste King, based in the Frogmore Industrial Estate, has also donated and recycled more than a ton of clothes in aid of the Salvation Army.

Contributions have come from members of the public and also the company's clearance service which has been used to clear the contents from several large houses.

The company installed new recycling points at its premises last year.
